

WHO: On track to 15 million on AIDS drugs by 2015

July 26 2012, by LAURAN NEERGAARD

---

UNICEF Deputy Executive Director Geeta Rao Gupta speaks during the XIX International AIDS Conference, Wednesday, July 25, 2012, in Washington. Her speech was entitled: "Turning the Tide for Women and Girls." (AP Photo/Carolyn Kaster)

(AP) — The World Health Organization says the global target of 15 million people taking life-saving AIDS drugs by 2015 is just a first step.

With 8 million people in poor countries taking them now, WHO's Dr. Gottfried Hirnschall told the International AIDS conference the world should meet the higher goal.

But the number needing drugs rises to 23 million with the goal beyond that: People who are not yet as sick but need treatment to lower their chances of spreading the virus. That includes high-risk populations, people in relationships with healthy partners, and pregnant women who would need to be kept on medication after their babies are born.

Hirnschall urged countries to expand HIV testing so they can start reaching those people, saying "now is not the time to be timid."

Copyright 2012 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Citation: WHO: On track to 15 million on AIDS drugs by 2015 (2012, July 26) retrieved 16 August 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2012-07-track-million-aids-drugs.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.