

Woman who fought flesh-eating illness goes home

August 23 2012, by RUSS BYNUM

(AP)—A 24-year-old Georgia woman who survived a rare, flesh-eating disease is back home after more than three months in the hospital and a rehabilitation clinic.

Aimee Copeland's father says she was "laughing it up" when she returned Wednesday to the family's home in Snellville outside Atlanta. Andy Copeland says the family had dinner at a steakhouse and showed his daughter her new wheelchair-accessible room and living quarters, which added nearly 2,000 square feet to their home.

Aimee Copeland contracted the rare infection in May after falling from a zip line and gashing her leg. Doctors had to amputate both her hands, her left leg and her right foot because of the rare infection called necrotizing fasciitis.

She spent the last two months at the Shepherd Center, a rehabilitation clinic in Atlanta, learning to move, eat and bathe without prosthetics.

Copyright 2012 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Citation: Woman who fought flesh-eating illness goes home (2012, August 23) retrieved 2 May 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2012-08-woman-fought-flesh-eating-illness-home.html>

| |
|---|
| This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private | study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
|---|