

Study examines if out-of-network doctors are worth the cost

November 14 2012

A Yale team of researchers has looked at the cost of seeking out-of-network medical care, and whether private insurance companies are transparent about the cost.

They sought to determine the proportion of privately insured adults using out-of-network physicians, the prevalence of involuntary out-of-network visits due to medical emergencies, and whether patients experienced problems with cost transparency. They found notable problems with cost transparency among insurance companies and regulatory agencies, and urged stronger measures to protect consumers from having to pay high, unanticipated charges.

The study appears online in the Health Services Research journal.

More information: [onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10 ...
1475-6773.12007/full](https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1111/hlss.12007/full)

Provided by Yale University

Citation: Study examines if out-of-network doctors are worth the cost (2012, November 14)
retrieved 6 May 2024 from

<https://medicalxpress.com/news/2012-11-out-of-network-doctors-worth.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--