

Farm bill: Senate rejects GMO labeling amendment

May 23 2013, by Mary Clare Jalonick

The Senate has overwhelmingly rejected an amendment allowing states to require labeling of genetically modified foods.

The amendment by Vermont independent Sen. Bernie Sanders tried to clarify that states can require the labels. Both the Vermont House and Connecticut Senate voted this month to make food companies declare genetically modified ingredients on their packages.

The Senate amendment was rejected Thursday on a 71-27 vote.

Opponents are from farm states that use a lot of genetically modified crops. They say the government should leave the issue to the Food and Drug Administration, which does not require the labeling. They say it would be was expensive for food companies and therefore consumers.

© 2013 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Farm bill: Senate rejects GMO labeling amendment (2013, May 23) retrieved 25 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2013-05-farm-bill-senate-gmo-amendment.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--