

Australia cracks down on synthetic drugs

June 16 2013

---

Australia imposed an interim ban on 19 synthetic cannabis and cocaine-like drugs on Sunday as part of a crackdown on the psychoactive substances which mimic the highs of their illegal counterparts.

Assistant Treasurer David Bradbury said the 19 products would be banned from sale and supply for up to 120 days under consumer laws, a measure which will give states and territories time to update their laws to ban them.

"Synthetic drugs are dangerous substances that can kill and should not be available for sale," Bradbury said.

Many synthetic drugs are already banned in parts of Australia, but Bradbury said the market was fast-moving and suppliers had shown a willingness to change brand names and packaging to get around bans made under consumer laws.

Australia's most populous state New South Wales temporarily banned synthetic drugs earlier this month after a 17-year-old Sydney boy fell to his death after taking a synthetic LSD product which made him believe he could fly.

Home Affairs Minister Jason Clare confirmed Sunday that the government will also develop legislation to ensure unauthorised synthetic drugs cannot be imported.

The move will mean that "new drugs coming onto the market are presumed to be illegal until the authorities know what they are and clear them as safe and legal".

Clare said a range of synthetic drugs were being sold in Australia, including via the Internet. They mimicked the effects of cannabis, cocaine and methamphetamine and were being marketed as a legal alternative to illicit drugs.

He said the new legislation would be in line with that already in place in Ireland and due to be brought into force in New Zealand in August.

Last month, Europe's drug agency warned about the rise in new synthetic psychoactive substances on that continent.

The European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction said 73 new psychoactive substances were detected on the market in 2012—compared to just 49 in 2011—and a greater proportion were from more obscure chemical groups.

"Many of the products on sale contain mixtures of substances, and the lack of pharmacological and toxicological data means it is hard to speculate on long-term health implications of use," the centre said in a report.

© 2013 AFP

Citation: Australia cracks down on synthetic drugs (2013, June 16) retrieved 6 May 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2013-06-australia-synthetic-drugs.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
---