

Feds post food allergy guidelines for schools

October 30 2013, by Mike Stobbe

The federal government is issuing its first guidelines to schools on how to protect children with food allergies.

The voluntary advice calls on schools to take such steps as restricting nuts, shellfish or other foods that can cause allergic reactions, and to make sure emergency allergy medicines like EpiPens are available.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention posted the guidelines on its website Wednesday.

About 15 states—and many schools or school districts—already have policies of their own. But experts say many of their policies are probably not comprehensive.

A recent CDC survey estimated that about 1 in 20 U.S. children have food allergies.

More information: CDC guidelines:
www.cdc.gov/healthyyouth/foodallergies/

© 2013 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Feds post food allergy guidelines for schools (2013, October 30) retrieved 25 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2013-10-feds-food-allergy-guidelines-schools.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.