

FDA says it will delay proposed food safety rules

December 19 2013, by Mary Clare Jalonick

The Food and Drug Administration will delay sweeping food safety rules proposed earlier this year and revise them to better accommodate farmers and businesses who would be affected.

The FDA says it wants to make sure the rules are practical for farmers who have to abide by them.

Michael Taylor is deputy commissioner for foods. He said Thursday the agency's thinking has evolved and "significant changes" are needed.

The rules proposed in January would require farmers to take new precautions against contamination, making sure workers' hands are washed, irrigation water is clean, and that animals stay out of fields.

Food manufacturers would have to submit food safety plans to the government to show they are keeping their operations clean.

© 2013 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: FDA says it will delay proposed food safety rules (2013, December 19) retrieved 18 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2013-12-fda-food-safety.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--