

States urged to register compounding pharmacies

January 10 2014

The federal government has sent letters to states and other stakeholders across the country calling on them to encourage compounding pharmacies to register as a producer of sterile drugs in an effort to protect the public.

The letter from the Food and Drug Administration is dated Wednesday. It reminds stakeholders of last year's law passed in response to a meningitis outbreak from contaminated injections that killed 64 people and sickened more than 750. The outbreak has been traced to the now-closed New England Compounding Center pharmacy in Framingham.

Iowa U.S. Sen. Tom Harkin said Friday that the law and the FDA's letter help "ensure the safety of compounded drugs and is aimed at helping to prevent a future public health crisis."

Registering with the FDA is voluntary under the law.
