

Alzheimer's buddy program pairs patients, students

March 4 2014, by Lindsey Tanner

A retired Chicago physician and educator is getting a bittersweet last chance to teach about medicine. This time Dr. Dan Winship is the subject.

He's 80 and in the early stages of Alzheimer's disease. Winship is among patients in a buddy program that gives medical students a close-up look at a disease they'll likely see often in their careers.

Alzheimer's affects millions nationwide and the numbers are expected to keep rising.

Northwestern University is among a handful of medical schools that run Alzheimer buddy programs. Students and patients socialize often and get to know each other during the school year.

Winship is paired with first-year med student Jared Worthington. He says the best part is just getting to hang out together.

© 2014 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Alzheimer's buddy program pairs patients, students (2014, March 4) retrieved 3 May 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2014-03-alzheimer-buddy-pairs-patients-students.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.