

25 drug companies to phase out animal antibiotics

March 26 2014, by Mary Clare Jalonick

The Food and Drug Administration says 25 pharmaceutical companies are voluntarily phasing out the use of antibiotics for growth promotion in animals processed for meat.

Citing a potential threat to public health, the agency in December asked 26 companies to voluntarily stop labeling drugs important for treating human infection as acceptable for use in animal production. The FDA did not name the one company that has not agreed to withdraw or revise its drugs.

The companies will either withdraw the drugs from animal use completely or revise them so they would only be able to be used with a veterinarian's prescription.

Many cattle, hog and poultry producers give their animals antibiotics regularly to ensure that they are healthy and to make the animals grow faster.

© 2014 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: 25 drug companies to phase out animal antibiotics (2014, March 26) retrieved 9 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2014-03-drug-companies-phase-animal-antibiotics.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--