

Judge blocks Massachusetts ban on painkiller

April 15 2014, by Steve Leblanc

A federal judge has blocked Massachusetts from banning the powerful new painkiller Zohydro.

The judge issued a preliminary injunction Tuesday after pharmaceutical company, Zogenix, argued in a lawsuit that the ban issued by Gov. Deval Patrick in March is unconstitutional. The judge said Massachusetts appears to have overstepped its authority in banning a federally approved medication.

The state argued that Zohydro will exacerbate a drug overdose problem in Massachusetts because Zohydro can be easily crushed, then snorted or injected to create an immediate and potentially lethal high.

The National Alliance for Model State Drug Laws says the Massachusetts ban is believed to be the first attempt by a state to block a federally approved drug.

The San Diego-based drugmaker hailed the Tuesday ruling. Massachusetts officials are reviewing it.

© 2014 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Judge blocks Massachusetts ban on painkiller (2014, April 15) retrieved 5 May 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2014-04-blocks-massachusetts-painkiller.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.