

Uganda's president urged to veto 'flawed' HIV law

May 14 2014

---

Rights groups are urging Uganda's president to veto a new measure that they say hurts the fight against HIV and AIDS in the country.

Human Rights Watch described Uganda's HIV law as "deeply flawed" in part because it is based on what the group called "stigma and discrimination."

The bill, passed by lawmakers on Tuesday, criminalizes intentional transmission as well as attempted transmission of HIV. It also includes mandatory HIV testing for pregnant women and their partners.

Ugandan lawmakers say the measure is necessary to stem the growing rate of HIV in this East African country, despite concerns that it could be used to violate the rights of people living with HIV.

About 1.5 million Ugandans live with HIV in a country of 36 million people.

© 2014 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Uganda's president urged to veto 'flawed' HIV law (2014, May 14) retrieved 27 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2014-05-uganda-urged-veto-flawed-hiv.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--