

Court: Patients responsible for outcomes of risky behavior

June 28 2014

(HealthDay)—The Colorado Supreme Court has ruled that patients can be at least partially responsible for their health outcomes resulting from their own unhealthy behavior, according to the American Medical Association (AMA), which supported the physicians in the case.

In the case of Kelly v. Haralampopoulos, two Colorado physicians were accused of medical liability following a patient's cardiac arrest during a procedure performed after the patient's presentation with abdominal pain. Close friends' testimony, however, indicated that the patient had been recreationally using a dangerous drug that is known to cause cardiac arrest.

A trial court allowed the friends' testimony to be considered in the case.

However, the appeals court denied admittance of the friends' testimony and overturned the lower court's decision in favor of the physicians.

"The physicians appealed to the Colorado Supreme Court, which upheld the decision of the trial court, in a ruling upholding that patients can be at least partially responsible for their health outcomes as a result of their own unhealthy behavior," the AMA said in a news release.

More information: More Information

Copyright © 2014 HealthDay. All rights reserved.

Citation: Court: Patients responsible for outcomes of risky behavior (2014, June 28) retrieved 15 May 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2014-06-court-patients-responsible-outcomes-risky.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--