

CDC: most Americans in favor of raising legal smoking age to 21

July 9 2015

(HealthDay)—Three-quarters of American adults favor raising the legal smoking age to 21, according to a report published online July 6 in the American Journal of Preventive Medicine.

While support for such a law was strongest among older adults and those who never smoked, 70 percent of smokers also supported the concept. Only 11 percent of adults strongly opposed such a policy, while 14 percent were somewhat opposed, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention researchers found.

"Raising the minimum age of sale of [tobacco products] to 21 could benefit the health of Americans in several ways," Brian King, Ph.D., acting deputy director for research translation in the CDC's Office on Smoking and Health, said in an agency news release. "It could delay the age of first experimenting with tobacco, reducing the likelihood of transitioning to regular use and increasing the likelihood that those who do become regular users can quit," he explained.

Although Hawaii raised the legal smoking age to 21 in June, 18 is the minimum age in most states. However, the minimum age is 19 in Alabama, Alaska, New Jersey, and Utah, the CDC said. And several cities and counties across the nation have raised the minimum age to 21, the agency added.

More information: Abstract
Full Text

Copyright © 2015 HealthDay. All rights reserved.

Citation: CDC: most Americans in favor of raising legal smoking age to 21 (2015, July 9) retrieved 1 May 2024 from
<https://medicalxpress.com/news/2015-07-cdc-americans-favor-legal-age.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--