

California lawmakers approve raising smoking age to 21

March 10 2016, by Jonathan J. Cooper

State Sen. Ed Hernandez, D-Azusa, uses a smart phone to record the vote of his measure to raise the smoking age from 18 to 21, at the Capitol, Thursday, March 10, 2016, in Sacramento, Calif. The measure, part of a package of bills aimed at restricting access to tobacco, was approved by the Senate and now goes to Gov. Jerry Brown for his signature.(AP Photo/Rich Pedroncelli)

California lawmakers voted Thursday to raise the smoking age from 18 to 21, approving a measure that would make the nation's most populous state only the second to put legal tobacco products out of the reach of most teenagers.

Before it can become law, Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown must sign the legislation, which has already passed the state Assembly. His spokesman said the governor generally does not comment on pending legislation.

Only Hawaii has adopted the higher age limit statewide, although dozens of cities, including New York and San Francisco, have passed their own laws.

"We can prevent countless California youth from becoming addicted to this deadly drug, save billions of dollars in direct health care costs and, most importantly, save lives," said Democratic Sen. Ed Hernandez, who wrote the bill.

The package of anti-tobacco bills would also restrict electronic cigarettes, which are increasingly popular and not regulated by the federal government.

The higher age limit won approval despite intense lobbying from tobacco interests and fierce opposition from many Republicans, who said the state should butt out of people's personal health decisions, even if they are harmful.

The six bills that passed both houses represented California's most substantial anti-tobacco effort in nearly two decades, according to the American Cancer Society.

State Sen. Ed Hernandez, D-Azusa, urge lawmakers to approve his bill to raise the smoking age from 18 to 21, at the Capitol, Thursday, March 10, 2016, in Sacramento, Calif. The measure, part of a package of bills aimed at restricting access to tobacco, was approved by the Senate and now goes to Gov. Jerry Brown for his signature.(AP Photo/Rich Pedroncelli)

"With California having such a huge population, it's going to be very impactful nationwide," said Cathy Callaway, associate director of state and local campaigns for the society.

Advocates noted that the vast majority of smokers start before they are 18, according to data from the U.S. surgeon general. Making it illegal for 18-year-old high school students to buy tobacco for their underage friends will make it more difficult for teens to get the products, they said.

Opponents said American law and custom has long accepted that people can make adult decisions on their 18th birthday and live with the consequences. Eighteen-year-olds can register to vote, join the military, sign legally binding contracts, consent to sex and do just about any legal activity besides buying alcohol.

In response, Democrats changed the bill to allow members of the military to continue buying cigarettes at 18.

A woman has a cigarette while using a smart phone, Thursday, March 10, 2016, in Sacramento, Calif. State lawmakers approved a package of laws to restrict the use of tobacco, including one that expands smoke-free areas to include bars, workplace break rooms, small businesses, warehouses, hotel lobbies and meeting rooms. (AP Photo/Rich Pedroncelli)

"You can commit a felony when you're 18 years old and for the rest of your life, be in prison," Assembly Republican Leader Chad Mayes said. "And yet you can't buy a pack of cigarettes."

Another bill would classify e-cigarettes, or "vaping" devices, as tobacco products subject to the same restrictions on who can purchase them and where they can be used.

The Food and Drug Administration has proposed regulations for e-cigarettes, but none has taken effect.

Anti-tobacco groups fear that vaporizers are enticing to young people and may encourage them to eventually take up smoking.

- In this July 16, 2015 file photo, Bruce Schillin, 32, exhales vapor from an e-cigarette at the Vapor Spot, in Sacramento, Calif. California's Senate is poised to vote Thursday, March 10, 2016, on a package of anti-smoking measures that include raising the smoking age to 21 and to regulate electronic cigarettes as tobacco, setting restrictions on their use. (AP Photo/Rich Pedroncelli, File)

"All the progress we've made since 1965 to educate people about the hazards of smoking may be for naught as vaping has started a new generation of nicotine junkies that will be helplessly addicted and will ultimately graduate to smoking cancer sticks," said Sen. Jeff Stone, a Republican.

Others say the devices are a less harmful, tar-free alternative to cigarettes. They have not been extensively studied, and there is no scientific consensus on their risks.

A vaping industry group, the Smoke-Free Alternatives Industry Group, urged Brown to veto the bill, saying in a letter that it could pose problems for vape shops.

"The stigma of being equated with tobacco has many negative consequences," the group wrote.

In this March 1, 2016 file photo, a man smokes a cigarette in San Francisco. California's Senate is poised to vote on Thursday, March 10, 2016, on a sweeping package of anti-smoking measures as lawmakers try to crack down on tobacco use and the health problems that flow from it, which would make California the second state to raise the smoking age to 21. The measures would also regulate electronic cigarettes as tobacco, setting restrictions on their use. (AP Photo/Ben Margot, File)

The bills would also expand smoke-free areas to include bars, workplace break rooms, small businesses, warehouses and hotel lobbies and meeting rooms. Smoking bans would apply at more schools, including charter schools, and counties would be able to raise their own cigarette taxes beyond the state's levy of $0.87 per pack.

The legislation would take effect 90 days after the governor signs it.

The Senate vote came just over a week after San Francisco officials opted to raise the tobacco buying age to 21, making it the largest city to do so after New York. Nationwide, more than 120 municipalities have raised the smoking age, according to Tobacco 21, a group that advocates the policy shift nationally.

Hawaii was first to adopt the higher age limit statewide. New Jersey's Legislature voted to raise the smoking age from 19 to 21, but the bill died when Republican Gov. Chris Christie decided not to act on it before a January deadline.

Anti-smoking groups are collecting signatures for a November ballot initiative that would raise the cigarette tax to $2 a pack and direct the money to health care, tobacco-use prevention, research and law enforcement.

© 2016 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: California lawmakers approve raising smoking age to 21 (2016, March 10) retrieved 2 May 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2016-03-california-lawmakers-age.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--