

Greece: Blood donations curbed after malaria cases reported

August 22 2016

Greece's health ministry says blood donations have been suspended at hospitals in several parts of the country following a spike in cases of malaria, linked to a high number of migrants traveling through the country.

The measure took effect Monday after 65 cases of the mosquito-borne infectious disease were reported since the start of the year, most involving migrants. The ministry described the cases as being "sporadic" and not a cause for public concern.

More than a million migrants have traveled through Greece since the start of Europe's refugee crisis in early 2015. Nearly 60,000 remain stranded following European border closures.

The Athens Medical Association argued the government had been unprepared for a potential malaria increase and called for the resignation of a senior health ministry official.

© 2016 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Greece: Blood donations curbed after malaria cases reported (2016, August 22)
retrieved 8 May 2024 from
<https://medicalxpress.com/news/2016-08-greece-blood-donations-curbed-malaria.html>

| |
|---|
| This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is | provided for information purposes only.
|---|