

NCAA honoring man who inspired ALS ice bucket challenge

December 13 2016

The NCAA is honoring the former Boston College baseball captain who inspired the ice bucket challenge that raised millions of dollars for Lou Gehrig's disease research.

Officials with the collegiate sports organization are set to present an award to Pete Frates on Tuesday at his home in Beverly, Massachusetts.

The NCAA announced earlier that Frates would be unable to accept the 2017 Inspiration Award at its January awards celebration in Nashville, Tennessee, because his neurodegenerative disease was progressing.

The organization will instead give him the award on Tuesday.

Frates was diagnosed with the disease in 2012. It's also known as amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or ALS. The ice bucket challenge raised more than $220 million when it took off worldwide on social media in 2014.

© 2016 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: NCAA honoring man who inspired ALS ice bucket challenge (2016, December 13) retrieved 20 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2016-12-ncaa-honoring-als-ice-bucket.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.