

Experts warn of health threats from climate change

February 20 2017

(HealthDay)—More heat waves, food shortages, and the rapid spread of some infectious diseases may occur in the future due to climate change, experts warned at the Climate & Health Meeting, held on Feb. 16 in Atlanta.

The meeting was organized to replace a U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention climate change conference that was canceled in January, ahead of President Donald Trump's inauguration, CNN reported.

Climate change will lead to an increase in life-threatening health issues, experts said at the meeting. For example, the World Health Organizations says climate change is projected to cause an additional 250,000 deaths a year from heat stress, malnutrition, and the spread of infectious diseases like malaria, according to CNN.

Ninety-seven percent of scientists agree that climate change is real and largely the result of human-made pollution, CNN reported.

More information: More Information

Copyright © 2017 HealthDay. All rights reserved.

Citation: Experts warn of health threats from climate change (2017, February 20) retrieved 17 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2017-02-experts-health-threats-climate.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
