

More women than men leaving practice of medicine

May 9 2017

---

(HealthDay)—More women than men leave the practice of medicine, according to an article published in Medical Economics.

According to the Medical Economics 88th Physician Report, equal numbers of men and women enter medical school, but there are more practicing male physicians. The report also states that more women cite burnout as the biggest issue facing primary care (71 percent of practicing women versus 64 percent of practicing men).

There are no concrete data indicating when women leave medicine—just that they leave at some point due to stressors, to raise children, or pursue different career paths. This illustrates the need to address the stresses female physicians face during the careers, including the pay gap, burnout, and returning to medicine after a break for raising young children.

"While laws vary from state to state, the returning physician will likely be required to take a skill, safety, and competency evaluation after approximately two years out of practice, and could then need to be monitored by another practicing physician for a period of time," according to the article.

More information: More Information

Copyright © 2017 HealthDay. All rights reserved.

Citation: More women than men leaving practice of medicine (2017, May 9) retrieved 19 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2017-05-women-men-medicine.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--