

Breast-feeding peer support services are lacking in many UK regions

July 7 2017

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

Peer support is recommended by the World Health Organization for the initiation and continuation of breastfeeding, but in a survey of 136 service managers with jobs related to infant feeding across UK NHS Trust and Health Board areas, breastfeeding peer supporters were available in only 56% of NHS areas.

There was no standardised provision of breastfeeding peer support around the UK, and services were regularly adapted in line with funding available, rather than number of births or perceived need.

"This research highlights that breastfeeding peer support services vary around the UK, meaning that mothers who want to breastfeed receive very different services depending on where they live," said Dr. Aimee Grant, lead author of the Maternal & Child Nutrition study. "We also found that although services wanted to attract mothers from poorer areas, they did not always attract them as service users, which may exacerbate health inequalities."

More information: Maternal & Child Nutrition , DOI: 10.1111/mcn.12476

Provided by Wiley

Citation: Breast-feeding peer support services are lacking in many UK regions (2017, July 7) retrieved 26 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2017-07-breast-feeding-peer-lacking-uk-regions.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--