

Americans world's biggest TV addicts, watching four hours a day

April 9 2018, by Taimaz Szirniks, Fiachra Gibbons

---

Americans gathered to watch the final presidential debate ahead of 2016 US election that Donald Trump went on to win

The average person around the world spent nearly three hours a day in front their television last year, according to a report released Monday.

Eurodata TV Worldwide said that television viewing was holding up despite more and more people watching online platforms like Netflix and Amazon.

Americans and Canadians are the biggest TV addicts, said the report, watching four hours and three minutes on average daily.

European viewers came next watching three hours 49 minutes a day in 2017, just ahead of Russia and Brazil, the data gathered from 95 countries showed.

"The length of time people watch television is holding up despite the growing availability of online content," said its vice president Frederic Vaulpre as the report was presented at MIPTV, the world's biggest TV market in Cannes, France.

"There was a slight fall in TV viewing in North America and Asia, but it is still growing in South America and in Europe it is maintaining historically high levels," he added.

Asians watch less TV than any of the other major markets, spending two hours 25 five minutes in front of the box. In China that drops to two hours 12 minutes.

TV is not dead

But viewing habits were also changing, the report found.

Replay services on average "added an extra eight percent to audiences" in the 35 countries where they were measured.

And millennials and young adults were spending more time on their mobile phones, often catching up with programmes that way.

In Sweden, one of the most digitally advanced countries in the world, young adults watched slightly less than two hours of TV a day.

Eurodata TV found that most young people who watched programmes on the Internet and on replay services were logging on for shows aimed specifically at them.

These included reality shows and youth dramas whose audiences were sometimes more than twice as big on the internet as they were for broadcasts.

The US and Britain remain the world's two biggest exporters of TV programmes and formats, ahead of France, Germany and Turkey, whose family-oriented soaps have been big hits across the Middle East, South America and the Balkans.

But the report found that there were fewer big international blockbuster shows like "The Voice" than in the past.

"Local productions always go down best" in most markets, said Avril Blondelot of Eurodata TV.

She said the big trend was for producers and TV channels to "create content aimed a particular niche audiences (young people, women or older people) rather than look for something that tried to take in a mass cross-over audience."

Paul Youngbluth of the TAPE consultancy told MIPTV delegates that there was a lot of "fake news" about the death of TV and insisted that "consumption is not decreasing.

"New US shows like 'The Good Doctor' and 'Roseanne' show that linear (traditional) TV can still draw very high live audiences," he added.

© 2018 AFP

Citation: Americans world's biggest TV addicts, watching four hours a day (2018, April 9)
retrieved 7 May 2024 from

<https://medicalxpress.com/news/2018-04-americans-world-biggest-tv-addicts.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--