

Surgical gown shortage reported in the United States

January 24 2020

A surgical gown shortage in the United States is causing surgeries to be postponed, according to CNN.

Cardinal Health this month recalled and told customers to stop using its Level 3 surgical gowns and the procedural packs that contain the gowns due to possible contamination. The company said it is not aware of any patients being harmed by the gowns.

More than 9 million gowns were recalled, including 7.7 million distributed to 2,807 facilities across the United States, CNN reported.

The gowns are worn during procedures such as arterial blood draws and intravenous insertions and in trauma cases, and they are also used in emergency rooms, according to the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

More information: CNN Article
More Information

Copyright © 2020 HealthDay. All rights reserved.

Citation: Surgical gown shortage reported in the United States (2020, January 24) retrieved 20 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2020-01-surgical-gown-shortage-states.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--