

WHO head warns worst of virus is still ahead

April 20 2020

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

The head of the World Health Organization has warned that "the worst is yet ahead of us" in the coronavirus outbreak, raising new alarm bells about the pandemic just as many countries are beginning to ease restrictive measures.

WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus didn't specify exactly why he believes that the outbreak that has infected nearly 2.5 million people and killed over 166,000, according to figures compiled by Johns Hopkins University, could get worse. Some people, though, have pointed to the likely future spread of the illness through Africa, where health systems are far less developed.

Tedros alluded to the so-called Spanish flu in 1918 as a reference for the coronavirus outbreak.

"It has a very dangerous combination and this is happening ... like the 1918 flu that killed up to 100 million people," he told reporters in Geneva.

"But now we have technology, we can prevent that disaster, we can prevent that kind of crisis."

"Trust us. The worst is yet ahead of us," he said. "Let's prevent this tragedy. It's a virus that many people still don't understand."

© 2020 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed without permission.

Citation: WHO head warns worst of virus is still ahead (2020, April 20) retrieved 2 May 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2020-04-worst-virus.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
