

U.S. to provide $4 billion for international COVID-19 vaccine program

February 22 2021

The United States will soon start providing $4 billion for COVAX, an international program to buy and distribute COVID-19 vaccines to poor countries.

White House officials said President Joe Biden will make the announcement Friday at a G-7 meeting and will also encourage other members of the group to make good on their pledges to the World Health Organization initiative, the Associated Press reported.

The $4 billion in funding was approved by Congress in December and will be doled out through 2022. The United States is committed to working through COVAX to ensure "equitable distribution of vaccines and funding globally," White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki told reporters on Thursday.

The COVAX program has already missed its own goal of beginning COVID-19 vaccinations in poor countries at the same time that shots were rolled out in rich countries, the AP reported. The WHO says COVAX needs $5 billion in 2021.

U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres said Wednesday that 130 countries have not received a single dose of the vaccine and declared that "at this critical moment, vaccine equity is the biggest moral test before the global community."

More information: Associated Press Article

Copyright © 2020 HealthDay. All rights reserved.

Citation: U.S. to provide $4 billion for international COVID-19 vaccine program (2021, February 22) retrieved 23 April 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2021-02-billion-international-covid-vaccine.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.