

Philippines approves COVID jabs for kids as young as 12

September 28 2021

Inoculating children is seen as a key step towards reopening schools in the Philippines.

The Philippines has approved COVID-19 jabs for children as young as 12, an aide to President Rodrigo Duterte said Tuesday, as the country battles surging infections fuelled by the hyper-contagious Delta variant.

Duterte's government has been skewered over the glacial rollout of vaccines, with just over a quarter of the adult population fully vaccinated nearly seven months after the first doses were delivered.

The daily case rate has soared, often exceeding 20,000, with hospitals struggling to handle the influx of patients as vaccine supplies dribble into the country.

Inoculating children is seen as a key step towards reopening schools in the Philippines, which is one of the few countries in the world to have kept them shut since the start of the pandemic.

The government recently announced plans for a pilot reopening of 120 primary and high schools, but few details have been released.

Kids will be allowed to receive the jabs from next month, presidential spokesman Harry Roque told reporters, as the vaccination drive is widened to include all adults not previously prioritised for shots.

The Philippines' food and drug regulator recently approved the Pfizer and Moderna jabs for kids aged 12 and above.

The move follows other countries such as Britain, the United States and Australia in approving specific jabs for adolescents.

The World Health Organization is still conducting trials on vaccinations for children and has only recommended that adolescents at high risk of contracting COVID-19 receive Pfizer shots.

Although children are considered less at risk of severe COVID, there are concerns that the highly contagious Delta variant could lead to more serious cases.

The government has previously set a target of vaccinating 70 percent of adults by the end of the year. In the national capital region more than 72 percent are fully protected, Roque said.

The country has recorded 2.5 million infections, including over 37,000 deaths, since March 2020.

In a pre-recorded speech broadcast Tuesday, Duterte said people refusing vaccines could be forced by police to get inoculated.

"If everybody does not comply with the vaccines... then the police must go in and intervene in your private life so that you cannot be a danger to society," he said.

© 2021 AFP

Citation: Philippines approves COVID jabs for kids as young as 12 (2021, September 28) retrieved 18 June 2024 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2021-09-philippines-covid-jabs-kids-young.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.