

Ohio bill would shield doctors who say 'My fault'

2 December 2014, by Andrew Welsh-Huggins

This undated photo provided by the Ohio House of Representatives shows Rep. Peter Stautberg. Doctors want to expand Ohio law by keeping conversations with patients or families where they admit fault in a medical procedure from being used as evidence in malpractice lawsuits. While Ohio law already includes protection for apologies by doctors, a bill sponsored by Stautberg, a Cincinnati Republican, would shield statements that take responsibility or acknowledge mistakes. (AP Photo/HO, Ohio House of Representatives)

A proposal in Ohio would allow doctors to acknowledge fault for a mistake to patients or their relatives without fear of the admission being used later in malpractice lawsuits.

The bill sponsored by Rep. Peter Stautberg, a Cincinnati Republican, would shield statements that take responsibility or acknowledge mistakes.

Tim Maglione (mag-lee-OHN') of the Ohio State Medical Association says doctors are still reluctant to sit down with patients out of fear an apology could be misconstrued.

The Senate is expected to hold hearings next week on the House-approved bill.

Ohio's legislation is similar to a bill pending in Congress. Several other states also have similar laws.

© 2014 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: Ohio bill would shield doctors who say 'My fault' (2014, December 2) retrieved 23 January 2021 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2014-12-ohio-bill-shield-doctors-fault.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.