

Panel gives weak endorsement of new meningitis shots

24 June 2015, by Mike Stobbe

A federal panel has given a weak endorsement to two expensive new meningitis shots, declining to recommend the vaccines for all teens and leaving the decision to parents and doctors.

At a meeting Wednesday in Atlanta, the panel approved a half-measure that says older teens and young adults may get the shots—if they and their parents want to take that step.

That statement is enough to greenlight insurance coverage of the new shots.

The vaccine targets bacteria that can cause dangerous meningitis or blood infections. Such illnesses are extremely rare, but have caused recent outbreaks at colleges.

Students already get another meningitis vaccine that protects against more common strains.

The new shots are expensive and their long-term effectiveness is unknown.

More information: CDC:

www.cdc.gov/vaccines/acip/

© 2015 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: Panel gives weak endorsement of new meningitis shots (2015, June 24) retrieved 22 October 2020 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2015-06-panel-weak-endorsement-meningitis-shots.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.