

Federal Agency: Calories on menus delayed until 2016

9 July 2015, by Mary Clare Jalonick

Diners will have to wait until the end of 2016 to find calorie labels on all chain restaurant menus.

The Food and Drug Administration says restaurants and other establishments will now have until December 1, 2016 to comply with federal menu labeling rules, a year beyond the original deadline.

FDA says it's extending the deadline after restaurants and other retailers covered by the rule said they needed more time to put the rules in place.

The rules will require restaurants and other establishments that sell prepared foods and have 20 or more locations to post the calorie content of food "clearly and conspicuously" on their menus, menu boards and displays. That includes prepared foods at grocery and convenience stores and in movie theaters, among other locations.

© 2015 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: Federal Agency: Calories on menus delayed until 2016 (2015, July 9) retrieved 19 October 2021 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2015-07-federal-agency-calories-menus.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.