

NYC law requires tampons in public schools, jails

13 July 2016

New York City is becoming the nation's first city to require free tampons and sanitary pads in public schools, homeless shelters and jails.

Democratic Mayor Bill de Blasio (dih BLAH'-zee-oh) signed the measures Wednesday. The City Council approved them last month.

Schools, shelters and lockups already provide the supplies for free, to some extent. Supporters say New York is pioneering by making the requirement law in a range of settings, instead of more changeable policy.

Those include restrooms that serve 300,000 sixth-grade-and-older schoolgirls, plus shelters that house 23,000 women. The measures also add the force of law to jail standards on sanitary supplies.

The supplies are expected to cost $2.5 million a year. The city budget is $82 billion.

The jail provisions take effect immediately; the others in six months.

© 2016 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: NYC law requires tampons in public schools, jails (2016, July 13) retrieved 24 September 2021 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2016-07-nyc-law-requires-tampons-schools.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.