

New Hampshire hospital emergency reopens after mystery odor

12 August 2017

A hospital emergency department in New Hampshire is open again, one day after an unknown odor sickened 19 workers.

Nineteen staff members at Exeter Hospital were evaluated after some complained of dizziness and nausea on Friday morning. Officials say all had recovered by Friday evening.

The hospital shut down an inpatient operation room and the emergency room directly above it. Authorities said a thorough investigation by the state hazmat team and the National Guard was completed Friday night, but officials weren't able to determine the cause.

The emergency department reopened Saturday afternoon after extensive cleaning. The operating room is expected to reopen Monday morning.

© 2017 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: New Hampshire hospital emergency reopens after mystery odor (2017, August 12) retrieved 13 December 2017 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2017-08-hampshire-hospital-emergency-reopens-mystery.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.