

WHO: Saturated fat should be less than 10 percent of diet

4 May 2018

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

The World Health Organization is taking on the battle of the bulge, saying that saturated fats shouldn't make up more than 10 percent of people's diet.

In its first draft guidelines on fat intake, the U.N. health agency said that to avoid piling on the pounds, both adults and children should ensure that no more than 10 percent of their calories come from saturated fat, found in foods including butter, milk, meat, eggs and chocolate.

WHO said only 1 percent or less of calories should be from trans fats, commonly found in baked and fried foods, processed foods and cooking oils.

WHO's draft advice largely matches similar nutritional guidelines in Britain and the U.S. The agency says it will consider external comments before the recommendations are finalized.

© 2018 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: WHO: Saturated fat should be less than 10 percent of diet (2018, May 4) retrieved 16 October 2019 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2018-05-saturated-fat-percent-diet.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.