Morocco on Tuesday increased its curfew hours and stepped up travel restrictions to three major cities in a bid to slow surging coronavirus cases.

A nationwide curfew, in place since December, is now in force from 9:00 pm (2000 GMT) to 5:00 am, according to a government statement. It was previously in force from 11:00 pm to 4:30 am.

The authorities have also restricted travel to and from the cities of Agadir, Casablanca and Marrakesh.

Those who have had two vaccinations are exempt from the night-time curfew and travel restrictions.

Gatherings of more than 25 people are also prohibited, and hotels are limited to 75 percent of capacity.

Existing restrictions remain, including a ban on funerals and wedding parties, as well as a 50 percent capacity limit on public transport, in cafes and in restaurants.
